On September 26, 1995, members of the TSUD Strategic Planning Committee (SPC), representing faculty, students, staff from TSUD, community leaders, Wallace College, business and industry, the Alabama Commission on Higher Education, and the Alabama Legislature, met to initiate the planning effort. Two sets of work groups, external and internal, are currently in the process of collecting data and identifying factors that will be considered as the SPC develops strategies and specific objectives to advance TSUD over the next three years.

- a. Local/Regional/State Political and Educational Climate
- b. Demographic and Social Issues
- c. Economic and Business Issues
- d. The Role of Technology

Internal technical teams are reviewing the institution's current conditions and identifying factors (both strengths and weaknesses) as the committee identifies planning assumptions to guide them in the following areas:

- a. Student Profiles
- b. Program Offerings, Current Capabilities, Accreditation Criteria, and Cooperative Agreements
- c. Personnel, Organization, and Technology
- d. Finance and Facilities

Important dates forthcoming are:

November 14, 1995 ... Approval of planning assumptions
December 14, 1995 ... Review of progress on objectives, strategies, and vision

TSUD escapes Opal

Instead of a rush of evening students arriving on the TSUD campus on Wednesday, October 4, Hurricane Opal made her way across the 250-acre landscape. Fortunately, major damage was held to a minimum.

According to Scot Craig, director of grounds, the most critical damage was eighteen of the oak trees on the main drive were blown over. The majority of those have been repositioned, but the future of these trees is uncertain at this time. One light pole was leveled on the main drive into the University. Several large pine trees were uprooted and landed in parking areas around campus. Only one large red oak tree was lost in the front area of Malone Hall. Trees, too numerous to count, were lost in the nature area behind campus and along the Thomas Harrison Walking Trail.

Malone Hall suffered some minor damage to shingles and to the dormer on the east side. The satellite dish beside Adams Hall received some damage from the high winds.

With all things considered and in comparison to some critically damaged areas in Dothan, TSUD fared very well during the storm.

Student Support Services

The Student Support Services Program has accepted thirty-one new participants in the program thus far Fall Quarter 1995 with assessments scheduled for six more within the next week. Most of these are fall quarter enrollees who attended orientation and opted to enter the program.

Program participants are first generation, low income, or documented disabled students with demonstrated academic needs. Two-thirds of the total 165 participants must qualify as both first generation and low income students. All participants must complete an application and assessment process. The assessments administered by Debora Pettway, counselor, are the Wide Range Achievement Test (WRAT), the Peterson's Career Inventory, the Electronic Learning and Study Skills Inventory Assessment, and a retention survey. Participants must complete the assessment before they can be assigned a tutor or receive any services.

When a student enters the program, we track student progress until completion of educational goals at TSUD. We realize that when a student completes his or her educational goal, it is a success for the University as well as a personal achievement for the student. The program works because University faculty, staff, and tutors work in unity with the participants to provide the greatest opportunities for student accomplishment.

TSU Ranked Among Nation's Top 25 Public Schools By In-state Tuition

A recent report from the editors of Money magazine ranked Troy State University as one of the 25 best public school buys in the nation.

Money Guide 1996, an annual report which lists the best college values in America, listed TSU 17th in the category for the top 25 public schools by in-state tuition. In addition to a list of the top 150 colleges, a separate ranking lists best values in six categories: small liberal arts schools, women's colleges, scientific and technical schools, black colleges, costly but worth it, and top public schools by in-state tuition.

TSU's ranking was determined from an analysis of in-state tuition and fees from a survey conducted by Money magazine. The special issue of Money magazine is designed to help students choose among schools that provide exceptional education for the money.

"We are delighted to be listed as a Money magazine best buy," said TSU System Chancellor Dr. Jack Hawkins, Jr. "With higher education funding cutbacks, this national ranking affirms our good stewardship in balancing quality with affordability. Our focus will remain on students."
